

Myles Leslie, PhD

Bio

Myles Leslie, PhD is a health policy researcher in the Cumming School of Medicine, Department of Community Health Sciences, and an associate professor at the School of Public Policy. His work focuses on the institutions, policies, regulations, and quality improvement programs that shape healthcare delivery. Dr. Leslie's central substantive interest is in the formation and implementation of policies aimed at delivering primary health care. He brings extensive international experience in ethnography and related qualitative methods to his role as Director of Research at the School of Public Policy, and an interest in the origins and challenges of trust in policy work to his teaching. Dr. Leslie joined the University of Calgary faculty in the autumn of 2016, arriving from the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine in Baltimore, MD. He was trained at the Universities of Toronto and Leicester where he held Canada Graduate and Trudeau Foundation Scholarships, and a post-doctoral position in patient safety and quality.